Innovation, diversity and modernity

This brief review will attempt to cover the diversity of the composing styles to be found in the works being performed in the 76 musical events listed this month with an emphasis on contemporary composers and those of the latter part of the 20th century. Beginning with the latter category, an usual musical event will take place at St Lawrence Jewry at 1.00pm on Tuesday 24 April as part of the 60th Anniversary celebrations of the rebuilding of the church after devastation in the Second World War. International piano recitalist and soloist Tessa Uys will be performing the well-known slow movement from piano concerto No 2 by Dimitri Shostakovich (1906-75) – not with her accustomed partner of full orchestra, but with orchestral accompaniment arranged and played on the celebrated Klais organ by Catherine Ennis, the resident organist at the church. Tessa Uys will be playing on the St Lawrence Jewry Steinway formerly owned by Sir Thomas Beecham.

At St Bride Fleet Street, Friday 6 April at 1.15pm, pianist Mitra Alice Than will perform Five Preludes by Julian Dawes (born 1942). He is an English composer with a prolific output, including musicals and scores for theatre productions. He has written a large number of sonatas and suites for a variety of combinations of instruments, 13 song cycles, and a wide range of other vocal, choral and chamber music. His compositions are influenced by English composers such as Herbert Howells, Lennox Berkeley and Richard Rodney Bennett. European composers, including Shostakovich, Kurt Weill, Prokofiev and Stravinsky have also influenced his work. His music is considered to be inventive but crafted with assurance. Mitra Alice Than's recital promises to be an interesting musical experience.

Also at St Bride Fleet Street on Friday 13 April at 1.15pm – the Gildas Quartet perform The Four Quarters by the British composer Thomas Adès. Born in 1971 he is an accomplished pianist and conductor and the composer of numerous works including three operas, choral music and a number of extended orchestral pieces one of which, Asyla, was chosen by Sir Simon Rattle in 2002 as the opening work of his first concert as principal conductor of the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra. Asyla has since been performed across the world and has been recorded as have many of his works. The Four Quarters for string quartet consists of four movements the names of which are given in the listing. It was commissioned by the Carnegie Hall Corporation, and was first performed in 2011 at the Stern Auditorium, Carnegie Hall, New York. Again, an interesting musical experience is in store.

In the well-known series of organ recitals at St Michael Cornhill, on Monday 9 April at 1.00pm Christopher Strange will perform a work by the young English concert organist and composer Martin Stacey. In addition to his own very active international career as a concert organist Martin Stacey is an enthusiastic promoter of contemporary composers of organ music and his own compositions have been well-received worldwide. In the recital his Totentanz (Hommage à Petr Eben) will be performed. This work was written for the Canadian organist Maxine Thévenot to whom the piece is dedicated. The music of the composer, organist and choirmaster Petr Eben (1929-2007) can be considered as "neoexpressionistic" with much of it based on improvisation of which he was considered to be a master. Martin Stacey asserts with gratitude that Eben's music had a powerful influence on his musical taste as a young musician. The piece itself was selected as an examination piece for the Fellowship of the Royal College of Organists in 2011-12.

This brief (for reasons of space) review will, it is hoped, whet the musical appetite of our readers who are interested in sampling diverse musical styles and performances. Needless to say there are many other very worthy examples of contemporary and 20th century music, together with much classical music of earlier eras, to be heard in the City churches this month, all of which are listed in the following pages.
