A Prom, two challenges and a farewell

On Saturday 17 August St Sepulchre without Newgate (Holy Trinity London), the Musicians' Church, will be hosting a BBC Promenade Concert featuring the BBC Singers in an extensive programme of English concert choral pieces spanning the 20th and 21st centuries. This is a ticket-only event and full details are given at the listing.

Certain musical compositions acquire special significance because of their technical difficulty. One such piece is Réminiscences de Don Juan (S. 418), an opera fantasy for piano by Franz Liszt on themes from Mozart's Don Giovanni. It is extremely technically demanding and has been described as one of the ten most difficult pieces of piano music in the world. Conner Fogel will be accepting the challenge of this piece on Monday 29 July at St Lawrence Jewry in a recital of works by Liszt

On Tuesday 30 July in the organ recital at St Michael Cornhill Benjamin Newlove will be accepting a similar challenge when he will be performing Reubke's Sonata on the 94th Psalm. It is a very individual work regarded as being composed well for the organ, requiring advanced pedal technique and a careful use of all the organ's departments. It is considered to be one of the pinnacles of the Romantic repertoire.

Music-at-Hill (originally St Anne's Music Society) will be leaving the City at the end of August and it has been decided to devote some space to the history of this thriving organisation. Music at Hill, currently celebrating its golden jubilee season, oversees one of the longest-running concert series in the City of London, having started life back in April 1969 as an outreach ministry of the Lutheran congregation based at St Anne & Agnes Church in Gresham Street. It remained there for some 44 years, moving in tandem with the Lutherans to its current home of St Mary-at-Hill six years ago. What began as a simple series of monthly organ recitals by the incumbent musical director Simon Lindley had by the mid-1980s been built up into a thriving beacon of music-making by the joint vision of the Lutheran Pastor, Revd Ronald Englund and his Cantor, Peter Lea-Cox. Peter was also responsible for founding the City's renowned Bach Cantata series, which via the monthly service of Lutheran Bach Vespers is still going strong in its fifth decade.

Following Peter-Lea Cox's retirement, the Society was successfully run by the next Lutheran Cantor, Lübeck-born Martin Knizia, for around a decade. Towards the end of this period the Lutheran Congregation and the Music Society were obliged to look for a new home (when the lease on St Anne & Agnes expired). Together, they moved their operations to St Mary-at-Hill, but while still co-operating closely they decided to go their own separate ways both constitutionally and financially, so Music-at-Hill now operates as a freestanding concert society, under the artistic direction of Stuart Whatton.

These days, the Society still oversees a special Bach Festival every July (a tradition which has been maintained since 1996) but its core activity is its Friday lunchtime concert series. Whilst laying on a wide variety of chamber music, the series has built up a particular reputation for its Baroque and early music programming, aided by the resident harpsichord and chamber organ. This autumn Music-at-Hill is planning to move its home base again, this time outside the Square Mile, to the midtown location of St Giles-in-the-Fields Church near Centre Point - though it hopes to retain residual links with its historic home in the City by returning to St Mary-at-Hill in future years for the July Bach Festival.

To mark its 50th anniversary, and to bid goodbye to the Square Mile, Music-at-Hill is planning a special day of concerts on Friday 26 July at the climax of this year's Bach Festival, which will include an exhibition of archival material and an early evening reception to which all concert-goers are welcome. Thus will end 50 golden musical years of residence in the City of London. We here at City Events send Music at Hill our warmest wishes for its continuing success in its new home.
